But climate change is killing trees. Forests cover almost half of Europe's land area, and that proportion is set to grow over the next three decades. Policymakers are planning to plant billions of trees in an effort to absorb emissions and slash the European Union's greenhouse gas emissions to net zero by 2050.

Europe struggles to seed the forest for the trees - POLITICO
"Now more than ever, as the forests burn and the usually pristine Oregon air turns toxic, we need to plant more trees," said Roger Worthington, owner of Worthy Brewing.
